

Acknowledgments

It is always a happy occasion to compose this segment of a book because the text is complete and we can now acknowledge those individuals and institutions that helped to make it possible. First and foremost, George R. Lewis, former secretary of the Department of General Services, J. Max Millstone, the present secretary, and Robin J. Zee, director of the Office of Central Services, unflinchingly gave us their support. The same is true of the Hall of Records Commission, under the chairmanship of Robert C. Murphy, chief judge of the Court of Appeals, which not only endorsed our proceeding with the two volumes that follow but also strongly recommended that we seek funding to continue the biographical study of Maryland legislators whose service began after 1789.

The major portion of funds for the biographical research came from the National Endowment for the Humanities, although the Maryland Bicentennial Commission did provide a grant to compile a Directory of Maryland Legislators, 1635–1789 and supplied a most generous subsidy for this publication.

Money is critical for an undertaking of this magnitude, but the expertise of scholars and friends is also essential. Several individuals gave freely of their time and knowledge to advise us as the project developed. Russell R. Menard, an authority on the early history of the Chesapeake Bay region, contributed significantly by researching many of the biographies of the legislators who served before 1715. Lois Green Carr, historian for the St. Mary's City Commission, granted us access to extensive biographical files on legislators who served from that county, and members of her staff helped us sift through the wealth of information the commission has collected. Both Morris L. Radoff, archivist emeritus of the Hall of Records, and Jack P. Greene, Andrew Mellon Professor of History at The Johns Hopkins University, gave advice and encouragement. J. Randall Miller assembled a preliminary draft of many of the session lists. David A. Bohmer and Allan Kulikoff shared the results of their research on different aspects of Maryland history, and Jackson Turner Main loaned his notes on late-eighteenth-century legislators. We also benefited from the insight of Marian Schallcross, Margaret Cook, and the late Louise Hinton, all extraordinarily knowledgeable on the history of Prince George's County, and Evelyn Parran Mackall, an authority on Calvert County. Carol Van Voorst assisted us with those clergy who either served in or were related to men who sat in the General Assembly. We are indebted to Michael J. Milton, assistant attorney general, for legal advice rendered to the project. A note of special appreciation and commendation must also be extended to William Jabine II and his staff artist, Helen Stone, from the Maryland Department of Natural Resources, for preparing the maps depicting legislative districts.

Except for the front matter, this book was keyboarded on an in-house text-editing system. This minicomputer was to prove indispensable. It furnished a reviseable data base for future editions, reduced the cost of composition, and enabled last-minute changes to be made easily. Use of such a device requires an expert "Tessy" (the acronym for "Text Editing System Operator"), and we were fortunate to have several who are adept at inputting and correcting. Donna McDonald, Fran Reilly, and their supervisor, Stephanie Tooles, deserve special recog-
